

Acknowledgments

This volume is the result of a Council on Foreign Relations project “Toward an Understanding of Russia,” which was supported by the Smith Richardson Foundation. The analyses in this volume were presented during a conference in Washington, D.C., on September 6–7, 2001. The views expressed are those of the authors alone.

The project director, Janusz Bugajski, as well as the project coordinator, Marek Michalewski, are grateful to all those who attended the conference, especially to our guests from Central and Eastern Europe. We are greatly indebted to the Smith Richardson Foundation, especially to Nadia Schadlow and Marin Strmecki for their assistance during the early stage of the project. We are also greatly indebted to Paula Dobriansky, who was the initiator of this project when serving as director of the Council’s Washington office. We would like also to thank David Kramer for his advice regarding the selection of conference topics.

Gratitude should also be extended to Council intern Karolina Kotwica, who was of invaluable help during the preparation of the conference for over 100 participants. Last but not least we would like to thank those involved in the production of this volume, especially Patricia Dorff, director of Publications at the Council.

