

Bibliography

This bibliography is extensive but not exhaustive. It emphasizes those secondary and especially primary sources that are most central to the book's analysis, most frequently cited therein, and/or least well-known in the emerging literature of which it treats. These sources are divided into four categories: books; articles and chapters; memoirs and published interviews; documents. In some cases, analytical books or articles are included among the memoir sources if used primarily for their contemporaneous observations or historical significance. With the exception of those particularly important or repeatedly cited, shorter articles from Russian periodicals are not noted here (though a list of those publications employed most extensively is included at the end of the bibliography). As in the endnotes—but in contrast to the text, where a more simplified style is used—Russian-language sources are rendered here in a modified Library of Congress system.
