

Contributors

GARY ANDERSON retired as a colonel from the Marine Corps in August 2000. While on active duty he served as commander at every level, from platoon to surveillance and reconnaissance group, including command of Camp Hansen on Okinawa. While on active duty he served in several operations; chief among them was Operation Continue Hope in Somalia in 1993, where he served as military liaison officer to the U.S. Liaison Office in Mogadishu. His nonoperating force assignments have included Marine Officer Instructor at Vanderbilt University, speechwriter and deputy director of the HQMC Special Projects Directorate, UN observer in Lebanon and Israel, faculty member at the Marine Corps Command and Staff College, and director of war gaming at Quantico.

MAJOR GENERAL DIPANKAR BANERJEE (ret.) is the founding director of the Institute of Peace and Conflict Studies in New Delhi, India. Previously, General Banerjee served as the deputy director of the Institute for Defense Studies and Analyses, where he was also a senior fellow, and the director of the Regional Center for Strategic Studies in Colombo, Sri Lanka. He has also held visiting fellowships at the United States Institute of Peace and the Henry L. Stimson Center, Washington, D.C. He has been a consultant to the United Nations on the Conventional Arms Register and was an international advisor to the International Committee of the Red Cross from 2000 to 2004. He has edited Comprehensive and Co-operative Security in South Asia (1998), Confidence Building Measures in South Asia (1999), CBMs in South Asia—Potential and Possibilities (2000), and South Asia at Gunpoint: Small Arms and Light Weapons Proliferation (2000).

MELY CABALLERO-ANTHONY is an associate professor at the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS) in Singapore. She is coordinator of the Non-Traditional Security Program (NTS) and secretary-general of the Consortium of Non-Traditional Security Studies in Asia (NTS-Asia). She is interested in regionalism and regional security in the Asian Pacific, multilateral security cooperation, and human security. She worked as lead researcher and manager for the Project on Health and Human Security in East Asia and was a researcher at the Human Security Project (Harvard University). Her publications include Understanding Non-Traditional Security in Asia: Dilemmas in Securitization (2006) and Studying Non-Traditional Security in Asia: Trends and Issues (2006). She is a member of the Council for Security and Cooperation in the Asia-Pacific (CSCAP), of the CSCAP Working Group on Peace Operations, and of the ASEAN Institute of Strategic and International Studies (ASEAN-ISIS); she is also an associate fellow at the Institute of Development and Strategic Studies (ISDS).

DONALD C. F. DANIEL is a member of the core faculty in the Security Studies Program at Georgetown University. He recently served as a special advisor to the chairman of the National Intelligence Council. Prior to assuming that post in January 2001, he was Milton E. Miles Professor of International Relations at the U.S. Naval War College. He has also been a research associate at the International Institute for Strategic Studies in London, a visiting fellow at the Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C., and a fellow at the UN Institute for Disarmament Research in Geneva. His book Coercive Inducement and the Containment of Crises (coauthored with B. C. Hayes and Chantal de Jonge Oudraat) was a runner-up for the Grawemeyer Award for Ideas on Improving World Order. His expertise includes international affairs, peacekeeping, the UN, U.S. security policy, global trends, strategy, and U.S. military affairs. Dr. Daniel received his Ph.D. in international relations from Georgetown University.

JOHN T. FISHEL, a specialist in Latin American affairs, is a member of the faculty of the School of International and Area Studies of the University of Oklahoma. He was professor of national security policy and research director at the Center for Hemispheric Defense Studies of the National Defense University until 2006. He was formerly adjunct professor at the School of International Service of American University and served as president of the Midwest Association for Latin American Studies (MALAS) and as president of the North Central Council of Latin Americanists (NCCLA). While on active duty in the U.S. Army, he held several positions, including chief of research and assessments of the Small Wars Operations Research Directorate (SWORD) and deputy chief of the U.S. Forces Liaison Group. He has authored and coauthored numerous publications, including Uncomfortable Wars Revisited (2006), Civil Military Operations in the New World (1997), and Invasion, Intervention, "Intervasion" (1997).

BASTIAN GIEGERICH is a research associate at the International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS), focusing on EU security and defense policy and on strategic culture. Before joining IISS in 2005, he was a research associate at the National Defense University in Washington, D.C., and a project manager at the Aspen Institute, Berlin, and he taught at the Department of International Relations at the London School of Economics, where he obtained his Ph.D. Recent publications include European Security and Strategic Culture (2006).

BIRGER HELDT is an associate professor of peace and conflict research and a research adviser at the Folke Bernadotte Academy (FBA). He leads the FBA's international working group on peacekeeping. He has published extensively on peacekeeping; his most recent book is Peacekeeping Operations: Global Patterns of Success, 1948–2004 (second edition, 2006).

KATRIN HEUEL is a research analyst at the International Institute for Strategic Studies. In May 2007, she completed her master of arts in security studies from the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University, where she also worked as a research assistant on peacekeeping. Before coming to Georgetown Ms. Heuel worked at the Aspen Institute, Berlin, as a senior program manager for three years. Prior to joining the Aspen Institute Ms. Heuel worked as a freelance journalist. Her articles have appeared in various publications, including the Washington Times and the General-Anzeiger in Bonn, Germany. She also holds a master's degree in political science from Hamburg University.

MARK A. LOUCAS is a research associate at the Fund for Peace. He is an analyst for the 2007 Failed State Index and works with the Peace and Stability Operations Program and the Foreign Policy Program. He has been coleader of the Regional Response to War Program since September 2007.

MARK MALAN is peacebuilding program officer at Refugees International and serves as the executive coordinator for the Partnership for Effective Peacekeeping. Before he joined Refugees International in 2007, he headed the Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution Department of the Kofi Anan International Peacekeeping Training Center in Ghana (2004–07) and the Peace Missions Program at the Institute for Security Studies (1996–2003). Until 1996, he lectured in political science at the Faculty of Military Science, University of Stellenbosch. Malan has published extensively on issues relating to regional security and peacekeeping in Africa.

BENJAMIN MARGO is a research assistant at the Center for Peace and Security Studies at Georgetown University. He received his master of arts in security studies from the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University, where he also worked as a research assistant on peacekeeping. He received an A.B. from Harvard College.

ALEXANDER I. NIKITIN, director of the Center for Political and International Studies (CPIS) and of the Center for Euro-Atlantic Security of the Moscow State Institute of International Relations (MGIMO), is vice-chairman of the Russian Pugwash Committee of Scientists for Disarmament and International Security and a member of the Advisory Board of the Center of Political Studies. He has also been a researcher at the Institute for the U.S. and Canadian Studies, research fellow at the NATO Defense College and at IFRi Institute, and a member of the USSR permanent mission to the UN. He has authored and coauthored several publications, including Eurasia: New Peace Agenda (2005), Peace Support Operations, Parliaments and Legislation (2004), and Peace-Keeping and Peace-Enforcement Operations: Theory and Practice (2000).

PAUL R. PILLAR, visiting professor and member of the core faculty of the Security Studies Program at Georgetown University, retired in 2005 as national intelligence officer for the Near East and South Asia. Formerly he was executive assistant to the CIA's deputy director for intelligence and executive assistant to Director of Central Intelligence William Webster. He also was deputy chair of the DCI Counterterrorist Center and was a member of the National Intelligence Council. In addition Dr. Pillar worked as federal executive fellow at the Brookings Institution. His publications include "Intelligence, Policy, and the War in Iraq" (Foreign Affairs, 2006); Terrorism and U.S. Foreign Policy (2001); and Negotiating Peace (1983).

PATRICIA TAFT, who has published editorials and journal articles on international law, humanitarian intervention, regional cooperation, and civil society empowerment, is a senior associate in the Peace and Stability Operations and Foreign Policy programs at the Fund for Peace (FFP). She currently leads the Threat Convergence Project and works for the Fund's annual Failed States Index. While working for FFP she has co-led field missions to Africa, the Americas, Asia, and Europe. Prior to her employment at the FFP she worked for the United States Institute of Peace and was a senior associate with the Public International Law and Policy Group, where she still serves on the Special Advisory Council. In addition, she serves on the board of directors of the Peace Operations Institute and teaches at American University's School of International Service.

SHARON WIHARTA is researcher in the Armed Conflicts and Conflict Management Project at the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI). She is SIPRI's principal researcher on peacekeeping and peacebuilding issues, focusing particularly on efforts to promote justice and to establish the rule of law in postconflict situations. In 2005–06, she co-led a study on local ownership and the rule of law during the peacebuilding process, which involved field missions to Afghanistan, Liberia, and Sierra Leone. She is also a member of the international Challenges of Peace Operations: Into the 21st Century Project. She is the author of several publications on peacekeeping, peacebuilding, postconflict justice, and humanitarian issues; and most recently she coauthored Transition to a Just Order—Establishing Local Ownership after Conflict (2007) and The Effectiveness of Foreign Military Assets in Natural Disaster Response (2008).