
Colonial Effects

Colonial Effects

The Making of National Identity in Jordan

Joseph A. Massad

C O L U M B I A U N I V E R S I T Y P R E S S N E W Y O R K

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PRESS
Publishers Since 1893
New York Chichester, West Sussex

Copyright © 2001 Columbia University Press
All rights reserved

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Massad, Joseph Andoni, 1963–

Colonial effects: the making of national identity in Jordan /
Joseph Andoni Massad

p. cm.

Revision of author's thesis.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0-231-12322-1 (cloth : alk. paper) — ISBN 0-231-12323-X

(pbk. : alk. paper)

1. Jordan—Politics and government—20th century. 2. National state.
3. National characteristics, Jordanian. 4. Jordan—Ethnic relations.
5. Postcolonialism—Jordan. 6. Jordan—Armed Forces—Political activity.
7. Culture and law. I. Title.

JQ1833.A58 M37 2001

956.9504'3—dc21

2001028017

Casebound editions of Columbia University Press books are printed on permanent and durable acid-free paper.
Printed in the United States of America

c 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1
p 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

*For my parents,
Jacqueline T. Hallaq
and Andoni Y. Mas'ad 'Arbid*

Contents

Acknowledgments xi

Introduction 1

Law, Military, and Discipline 2

Tradition and Modernity 5

Historical Moments 8

Jordan's Historical Moments 10

1. Codifying the Nation: Law and the Articulation of National Identity in Jordan 18

The Prehistory of Juridical Postcoloniality 22

National Time 25

National Space 33

National Territory and Paternity 35

Nationalizing Non-nationals 38

Losing Nationality: The Law Giveth and the Law Taketh Away 43

Women and Children 45

2. Different Spaces as Different Times: Law and Geography in Jordanian Nationalism 50

Different Species of Citizens: Women and Bedouins 51

Bedouins and National Citizenship 56

Nationalist Tribalism or Tribal Nationalism: The Debate	66
Jordanian Culture in an International Frame	73
Women Between the Public and Private Spheres	79
Women in Public	88
Women and Politics	92
 3. Cultural Syncretism or Colonial Mimic Men: Jordan's Bedouins and the Military Basis of National Identity	 100
The Bedouin Choice	105
Cultural Imperialism and Discipline	111
Cultural Cross-dressing as Epistemology	117
Imperialism as Educator	131
Masculinity, Culture, and Women	137
Transforming the Bedouins	143
Education, Surveillance, and the Production of Bedouin Culture	148
 4. Nationalizing the Military: Colonial Legacy as National Heritage	 163
Anticolonial Nationalism and the Army	165
King Husayn and the Nationalist Officers	171
Clash of the Titans: Glubb Pasha and the Uneasy King	178
"Arabizing" the Jordanian Army	185
The Palace Coup: The End of an Era	189
Palace Repression and the Forgiving King	198
Palestinians and the Military	204
Threatening the Nation's Masculinity and Religious "Tradition"	207
The Military and the New Jordan	213
Colonial or National Legacy?	217
 5. The Nation as an Elastic Entity: The Expansion and Contraction of Jordan	 222
Expanding the Nation: The Road to Annexation	226
The Jericho Conference	227
The New Jordan	233
Palestinians and the West Bank	235

Competing Representatives: The PLO and Jordan	236
Toward Civil War	240
A New Nationalist Era	246
Clothes, Accents, and Football: Asserting Post–Civil War Jordanianness	250
Contracting the Nation: The Road to “The Severing of Ties”	258
Who Is Jordanian?	263
Concluding Remarks	276
Notes	279
Works Cited	353
Index	371

Acknowledgments

This book began as a dissertation. I have enjoyed thinking about, researching, and writing it in ways I did not anticipate. When I embarked on this intellectual journey, I thought that I already knew many of the answers to the questions I was posing. In the process, I realized that I knew only few of them, and even then not adequately. I have learned much from this project, not only about nationalism and Jordan but also about myself as a subject of both. It is through working on this project that I came to understand how I became a Palestinian Jordanian. My hope is that this book will serve to explain the process through which the Jordanian people came to see “ourselves” the way “we” do.

I have been helped and guided by many colleagues, friends, and family members in the years since this project began. I would like to begin by thanking Lisa Anderson, my professor and advisor, for believing in this project and for supporting it despite her initial misgivings about its unorthodox methodology. Her trust in me strengthened my resolve to proceed and finally to complete this project. Although I was not his student, Timothy Mitchell gave me much of his time and attention. His careful reading of the dissertation chapters and his attention to the historical material as well as my theoretical approach made me rethink a number of contentions I had initially made. His interventions made the final version much richer. I thank him for his support and intellectual engagement.

From Edward Said, I learned much of what I know about culture, representation, and empire. I began reading Edward Said when I was a freshman in college. I only met him eight years later. His work has had the greatest influence on my intellect and my work. His help and support in and out of class went beyond the call of duty. To him, I owe much gratitude, both professional and personal.

My mother has had and continues to have the greatest influence on my life. I have learned much from her about the importance of knowledge and education, about inequality between women and men and between the poor and the rich, about commitment and respect, and most of all about love. I would never have been able to pursue my university education were it not for her personal and financial sacrifices (and those of my father and sisters).

From my father I learned to love languages. Although he learned English and French at school, he taught himself Italian so well that he speaks it as fluently as he speaks Arabic. When my sisters and I were children, my mother and father (both of whom were 1948 Palestinian refugees who, along with their families, fled the Palestinian city of Jaffa to escape advancing Zionist forces, losing all their belongings in the process) would always tell us “we do not have wealth to bequeath to you, only education. Even if we had money to bequeath to you, you would spend it. Education, however, will remain with you forever.” This dictum is shared by many Palestinian refugees rendered penniless by the loss of their country and homes.

My mother always dreamed of obtaining a university education, a dream that remains unfulfilled. To make it up to herself, she moved heaven and earth to ensure that her children would go. My father’s pride in his children’s academic accomplishments is always manifest. Like my mother, he did not have a chance to obtain a university education.

During my stay in Amman in 1994 and 1995, and during subsequent visits in 1996 and 1997, I received much love and support from my sisters, Suzie, Roula, and Rania, and my nephew and nieces, Samer, Dina, and Nadine. I thank them all for their patience and love.

The intellectual engagement and friendship of Muhammad Ayyub and Jihad Yahya kept me sane at many different moments. Even after I left Amman, Jihad helped procure documents for me that I needed and did not have. The loving friendship I received from Salam ‘Arif Al-Rubay’i sustained me throughout that period. All three provided me with much-needed companionship, forming with my family a support system without which Amman would have been a much lonelier place. I thank them all.

In my research efforts, I was helped by a number of people in Amman. I would like to thank Nahlah Abu-Khalaf and Camelia Hattar from the Center for Strategic Studies at the University of Jordan for facilitating contacts and for their professional support despite institutional constraints. I would also like to thank Dr. Nufan al-Humud of the Center for Manuscripts (Markaz al-Watha'iq) at the Library of the University of Jordan for his research help. 'Abdullah Dandam of the microfilm center at the library of the University of Jordan was tireless in his efforts. He helped me locate many newspaper issues that otherwise would have been impossible to find. His help was truly exemplary. I owe him much gratitude. My research experience was made less lonely by Marc Lynch, who was conducting his own research at the same time in Amman. We shared our high and low points in conducting research, as well as many a bus ride from the University of Jordan.

I would like to thank Dr. Ma'n Abu Nuwwar for sharing with me his recollections as well as his research material, and Dr. Ma'ruf al-Bakhit of the Jordanian Arab Army's General Headquarters (al-Qiyadah al-'Amah) for facilitating my access to the library of the Army's Department of Spiritual Guidance (Maktabat Al-Tawjih Al-Ma'nawi).

Rana William Ziyadat, the librarian at Maktabat al-Tawjih al-Ma'nawi, was generous with her time and with extra books from that library. Hani Hurani was also generous with his time and with the publications of the New Jordan Studies Center. I thank them both for their support. My cousins Ninette 'Arbid and Amin Batshun were very generous with me personally and professionally. The thousands of copies they made for me at their business were offered not only free of charge but with a loving and supportive smile. I will always be grateful to them.

Many thanks to Mu'nis al-Razzaz and Suhayr Al-Tall, with whom I had many informative and lively conversations. Suhayr has been a role model in many ways. Her intellectual acuity, commitment to justice, and political activism on behalf of Jordanian women in general, and on her own behalf as a Jordanian woman, are inspirational. I would like to thank her for her friendship and generosity.

I also would like to thank Buthayna Jardanah of Nadi Sahibat Al-A'mal wa All-Mihan for her time and help in giving me access to the Nadi's library. My thanks to the Jordanian Women's Union for the documents and conference papers they provided me. Riccardo Bocco is a friend and a colleague. His support and critical insight have helped improve many parts of the manuscript. I thank him for all the support he has given me.

While writing in New York, I received the help of many friends, not all of whom lived in that city. From Washington, D.C., Lamis Jarrar, Lana Shekim, and Nour Barakat gave much love and support. Our long-distance telephone bills testify to that. José Quiroga has supported my doctoral career from the beginning. His loving support, friendship, and advice were always a source of encouragement. He helped me move to New York from Washington, D.C., easing my transition difficulties to a city I had held in awe. Kouross Esmaeli provided much love and support. His political intransigence matched mine in ways he might not know. Ella Habiba Shohat and Magda al-Nowaihi were a great source of support and friendship, both personal and political. Ali Razki and Susan Scott-Kerr gave me much love and support and excellent food. I thank them all.

Since my first years in college at the University of New Mexico, a number of people have played a role in changing the way I apprehend the world. Marcos Paz, Liza Martinez, Lori Rudolph, and Madeline Aron taught me much about “America.” Philip Farah was the first to teach me what politics and intellectual life are. Despite our many political and intellectual differences since that “inaugural moment,” I remain indebted to him for introducing me to a world of which I knew very little. Beth Kaimowitz has the sharpest intellect of anyone I know, as well as the most passionate commitment to justice. From her, not only did I learn how to answer certain questions but also how to reformulate the questions altogether, and how to interrogate the terms that the questions deploy. I am a much richer person for having known them all.

The friendship, love, and intellectual engagement of Neville Hoad made writing and thinking through this book a challenging and pleasurable exercise. His sharp intellect and wit have kept me constantly on my feet. His intellectual imprint can be found on every word of this book. He has graciously read and reread more versions of chapters than I (or he) care to remember. Without his insights, this book would have looked very different.

Special thanks are owed to Kate Wittenberg and Peter Dimock of Columbia University Press, whose support was crucial for the publication of this book. Marjorie Wexler’s highly non-interventionist copyediting made the publishing process enjoyable. I thank her for all her efforts. I would also like to thank the manuscript’s anonymous readers for their insightful comments.

My research in Jordan was funded by a fellowship provided by Columbia University’s Department of Political Science and a number of summer travel grants provided by Columbia University’s Middle East Institute. I thank them both for trusting in my project. An earlier version of Chapter 1 was published in Le Royaume Hachémite de Jordanie: Identités sociales, politiques de développement et construction étatique, 1946–1996, edited by Riccardo Bocco and published (2001) in Paris by Karthala and in Amman and Beirut by CERMOC.