CHAPTER EIGHT

1. For a discussion of the 1960 ratings, see Mazo et al., The Great Debates, 4. It should be noted that viewership figures for presidential debates, then as now, are notoriously difficult to pinpoint with any precision. As Mazo et al. writes, significant disparities existed between ratings figures cited by the broadcast networks in 1960 and those taken by political pollsters. See also Frank Stanton, "A CBS View," in Kraus, The Great Debates: Background, Perspective, Effects, 65–72.

2. "2 Million L.A. Homes View Carter-Reagan Debate," Los Angeles Times, 30 October 1980, VI-8. Although network estimates set viewership for the 1980 Carter-Reagan debate at a figure between 105 million and 120 million, the author's figure of "more than 100 million" allows for some inflation. The averages of 60 to 80 million viewers per presidential debate, and 30 to 50 million per vice presidential debates, are general estimates, based on the author's reading of various postdebate ratings data from 1976 to 1996.
