

COLONIAL CITIZENS

THE HISTORY AND SOCIETY OF THE MODERN MIDDLE EAST,
LEILA FAWAZ, GENERAL EDITOR

COLONIAL CITIZENS

REPUBLICAN RIGHTS, PATERNAL PRIVILEGE, AND GENDER IN FRENCH SYRIA AND LEBANON

Elizabeth Thompson

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PRESS NEW YORK

Thanks to the following institutions for their authorization to reproduce the illustrations in this book: Imperial War Museum for figure 13; Middle East Centre, St. Antony's College, Oxford for figures 20–22; Direction des Archives, Ministère des Affaires étrangères, Paris for figures 2–5 and 17; and Princeton University Press, for the map.

Columbia University Press

Publishers Since 1893

New York    Chichester, West Sussex

Copyright © 2000 Columbia University Press

All rights reserved

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Thompson, Elizabeth

Colonial citizens : republic rights, paternal privilege, and gender in French Syria and Lebanon / Elizabeth Thompson.

p.    cm. — (History and society of the modern Middle East series)

Includes bibliographical references (p. — ) and index.

ISBN 0-231-10660-2 (cloth). — ISBN 0-231-10661-0 (pbk.)

1. Syria—Social policy. 2. Syria—Social conditions—20th century. 3. Women—Syria—
Social conditions—History—20th century. 4. Syria—History—French occupation, 1918–1946. 5. Lebanon—Social policy. 6. Lebanon—Social conditions—20th century.
7. Women—Lebanon—Social conditions—History—20th century. 8. Lebanon—
History—French occupation, 1918–1946.

I. Title. II. Series.

HN658.A8T46

1999

306'.095691—DC21

99-34454

Case bound editions of Columbia University Press books are printed on permanent and durable acid-free paper.

Printed in the United States of America

c 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

p 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

To David, with love and gratitude

THE HISTORY AND SOCIETY OF THE MODERN MIDDLE EAST
LEILA FAWAZ, GENERAL EDITOR

Andrea B. Rugh, Within the Circle: Parents and Children in an Arab Village
Selma Botman, Engendering Citizenship in Egypt
Janet Afari, The Iranian Constitutional Revolution
Juan Cole, Modernity and the Millennium
Elizabeth Thompson, Colonial Citizens: Republican Rights, Paternal Privilege, and Gender in French Syria and Lebanon

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	ix
Note on Transliteration	xi
Abbreviations	xiii
Chronology	xv
Map of Syria and Lebanon in the Mandate Era	xix

Introduction 1

PART I

WAR AND THE ADVENT OF FRENCH RULE: A CRISIS OF PATERNITY 15

1. World War I: Famine, Memory, and a Shattered Social Order 19
2. Soldiers and Patriarchs: Pillars of Colonial Paternalism 39
3. Bureaucrats: Mother France's Civilizing Mission 58

PART II

PATERNAL REPUBLICANISM AND THE CONSTRUCTION OF SUBALTERN CITIZENS 71

4. State Social Policy: Constructing a Hierarchy of Citizens 73
5. Revolt: The Rise of Subaltern Movements 91

PART III

GENDER AND THE LEGAL BOUNDARIES OF THE COLONIAL CIVIC ORDER 113

6. Political Rights: Women's Suffrage as a Revolutionary Threat 117
7. The Veil and the Dual Legal System 127
8. Civil Rights: Patriotic Motherhood and Religious Law Reform 141
9. Social Rights: Emergence of a Colonial Welfare State 155

*PART IVGENDERING THE PUBLIC: SPATIAL BOUNDARIES
OF THE COLONIAL CIVIC ORDER 171*

- 10. Remapping the Urban Landscape 175
- 11. Street Violence: Regendering an Old Urban Space 184
- 12. Cinemas: Gendering a New Urban Space 197
- 13. The Press: Gendering the Virtual Public 211

*PART VWORLD WAR II AND THE TRANSFORMATION
OF THE COLONIAL CIVIC ORDER 225*

- 14. Climax of the Colonial Welfare State 229
- 15. Claiming Paternity of Independent Republics 247
- 16. The Making of Postcolonial Citizens 271

Appendix 291Notes 297Bibliography 353Index 377Illustrations appear as a group after page 170

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It has been a pleasure and a privilege to come to know the women and men who lived during the French mandate in Syria and Lebanon. The opportunity to learn about them was afforded me by the generous support of several institutions and many kind individuals. The Joint Committee on the Near and Middle East of the Social Science Research Council and the American Council of Learned Societies supported my dissertation research, upon which this book is based. Funds from the Middle East Institute at Columbia University, the Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation, the French Republic's Bourse Chateaubriand, and the history department at the University of Virginia helped me to start and finish the project.

This study would not have been possible without the records left behind by French administrators and stored at the French foreign ministry's diplomatic archives in Paris and Nantes. Equally valuable were the collections of Arabic- and French-language periodicals at the Asad and Zahiriyā libraries and French Institute in Damascus, the Bibliothèque nationale annex in Versailles, the British Library, and Harvard College Library. Additional archives and libraries preserved other perspectives that enriched this study: the Historical Documents Center in Damascus; the Jesuit archives in Vanves; the military archives in Vincennes; the Chamber of Commerce and the Maison de l'Orient méditerranéen in Lyon; the Alliance Israélite, the Cujas law library and CHEAM in Paris; the Public Record Office in London; and Middle East Centre at St. Antony's College and the Centre for Lebanese Studies in Oxford. I am grateful to the staffs at these institutions for their assistance, and especially to Alice Deyab at Harvard, who provided invaluable guidance on women's periodicals; Nadim Shehadi at Oxford, whose invitation to a 1994 conference on the French mandate connected me with other scholars of the period; Pascal Even, former curator at Nantes, who released many classified documents from the World War II period that were essential to my research; and Pierre Fournié at the Quai d'Orsay in Paris, who helped me find many of the illustrations reproduced here.

I wish to express, finally, my profound gratitude to the many individuals who gave freely of their time and expertise to help me conceptualize, research and write this book. I owe a great debt to faculty at Columbia University, especially to Atina Grossmann for inspiring the project during a graduate seminar, to Robert Paxton for his guidance on French scholarship, and to Richard Bulliet and Lisa Anderson for their unwaivering encouragement. Abdul-Karim Rafeq at the College of William and Mary has been a true mentor over the years, always ready to comment on drafts, guide research, and retrieve materials on his regular trips home to Damascus. James Gelvin at UCLA was the first to alert me to the existence of the Nantes archives and so to the possibility of undertaking this study. In Damascus, Nazih Kawakibi introduced me to the urban history of the city, Amal Husseini helped me find information on the women's movement and my dear friend Soura retrieved copies of women's magazines from the American University of Beirut's library when I was not permitted to travel to Lebanon. I thank Mark Thomas for help on analyzing financial data and Anne Stinehart for her translations from German. And for help on preparing illustrations for the book, I thank Palmira Brummett, Sarah Graham-Brown, and William Cleveland. The comments of Cynthia Aron, Brian Balogh, Beth Baron, Herbert (Tico) Braun, Nicole Dombrowski, Ellen Fleischmann, Steven Heydemann, Steve Innis, Philip Khoury, and Farzaneh Milani on various drafts of the manuscript clarified and strengthened my argument, as did conversations with Eileen Boris, Jean-Claude David, Randi Deguilhem, Leila Fawaz, Akram Khater, Josh Landis, Elisabeth Longuenesse, Garay Menicucci, Françoise Métral, Birgit Schaebler, and Christian Velud. Support from personal friends, especially Renée Friedman, Ariel Salzman, and the late and much-missed Estelle Whelan, inspired me and relieved the angst of research and writing. I would never have aspired to become a scholar without the encouragement of my mother, Ruth Thompson, whose support has meant so much to me through the years. I reserve my deepest gratitude for my husband, David Waldner, whose faith and love gave me the courage to carry this project through.

Elizabeth Thompson
July 1999